In Short: The Sonomos browser extension processes all sensitive data locally on your device. No user content is transmitted to Sonomos, Inc. or any third party.*

What happens on your device (and stays on your device):

- All text scanning and sensitive data detection is performed locally using on-device pattern matching and, where enabled, on-device machine learning models.
- All data masking and obfuscation is performed locally before any content leaves your device.
- Detection settings and preferences are stored locally using Chrome's local storage API.
- No user-generated content is ever transmitted to Sonomos servers, any third-party server, or any external service.

What the extension communicates with our servers:

- License validation and subscription status checks (email address and subscription tier only).
- Extension updates are delivered automatically through the applicable browser marketplace (e.g., Chrome Web Store). Extension version information may be included in user-initiated support requests.

What the extension does NOT do:

- Send detected sensitive data patterns or categories to any server.
- Use any cloud-based AI or machine learning services for content analysis.
- Collect browsing history, page content, or interaction data.
- Use cookies, web beacons, pixels, or any tracking mechanisms.
- Collect telemetry or usage analytics from within the extension.

Chrome Extension Permissions: The extension requests permissions to scan text input fields on supported AI chat interfaces (ChatGPT, Claude, Gemini, etc.) solely for detecting and masking sensitive data. The extension does not use these permissions to collect, record, or transmit page content.
